History of Governments

Introduction

What is needed to establish a government? A group of settlers arrive in a new land teeming with fish, game, and forests. There are natural resources in abundance, and there is no doubt that this is the place to start a new colony. But where do you go from here? Who sets up the government? Should the society be democratic or socialist? What ingredients make up a good government? If you were to establish a colony, what principles would you need to know? By examining the many forms of government that were established by tribes and nations, we can gain an idea for some of the building blocks required to make a government successful. There are simple foundational truths that are consistent with almost any government—good or bad—that help organize and strengthen the structure.

Objectives

Read these objectives. The objectives tell you what you will be able to do when you have successfully completed this LIFEPAC®. When you have finished this LIFEPAC, you should be able to:

- Describe the elements necessary for a successful and effective government.
- 2. Explain the history and direction of democracy in ancient Greece and Athens.
- 3. Explain the concept of a "republic" and be able to compare and contrast Roman and Greek forms of government.
- Explain the concept of "feudalism" and its effect on people in the Middle Ages. 4.
- 5. Describe a theocracy.
- 6. Describe a democracy.
- 7. Describe fascism and give examples from history of fascist leaders and countries.
- 8. Describe and give a brief history of Nazism.

Survey the LIFEPAC. Ask yourself some questions about this study and write your questions here.

A PRIMITIVE GOVERNMENT PRIMER

What is needed to establish a government?

- 1. Leadership is needed. Whether they want to be governed by a group of leaders or a solitary decision-maker, any group of people who want to establish themselves in an orderly manner must have leadership. The Bible shows us many examples of leaders who took their responsibility seriously, through good and bad times. Moses, Aaron, and David are just a few of the leaders who were able to enhance the growth of their governments by being the proper point of authority. Any government needs a leader to whom the people can turn. There must be a stopping place in the decision-making process where the population can feel satisfied that someone is taking responsibility. As many organizations will say, "The buck stops here!" Who is in charge? Whether it is a monarchy, democracy or even oligarchy, there must be a final point of authority. Sam Houston of the Republic of Texas is a fine example of a leader who kept a government strong and active.
- 2. Safety is a priority. Measures must be taken to be safe. Think of it—who would want to be part of an organization that could not assure a secure surrounding? People settling in an area want to feel safe from outside attacks. What if an enemy creeps in and tries to destroy the group? Protection might not be in the form of a standing army or a powerful navy, but any population that seeks to be independent needs to have a guarantee that the citizens could be free from damage or danger. A good government needs to organize a group that would ensure its protection. Founded in the wilderness, areas such as Fort Pitt (which would later become the city of Pittsburgh) made safety one of their top priorities.
- 3. Production and sustenance should be provided daily. Food is needed for people to live. People need to eat, and they must be given the opportunity to take care of themselves and their families. Does your government have farming in the community or will the food be shipped from another area? Are goods and services readily accessible? People need to feel assured that provisions are available. If they do not, they will seek other places that will sustain them. A good example of this need is seen in the Sinagua Indian tribe of over 600 years ago. They left an intact village, including a 20-room five-story dwelling in what is now Camp Verde, Arizona. Experts believe they abandoned the village for - no other reason than that they could not maintain enough supplies with the abilities and resources they had.

- 4. Law and order must be maintained. The apostle lohn wrote of the lack of order in a church in 3 John 1:9—"I wrote unto the church: but Diotrephes, who loveth to have the preeminence among them, receiveth us not. Wherefore, if I come, I will remember his deeds which he doeth, prating against us with malicious words: and not content therewith, neither doth he himself receive the brethren, and forbiddeth them that would, and casteth [them] out of the church." Diotrephes is an example of how even one person can cause great disorder. By his gossip and desire for being the "take charge" man, Diotrephes was actually causing a lot of problems in the growth of the assembly. The same principle is true in any organization or government: if there is not order, problems will arise. John was using Godly wisdom in pointing out the problem. Problems that are not addressed will grow larger until they become almost insurmountable. If a city is not organized, it will disintegrate. If a colony has no policing, it will soon be decimated by crime. Any government which does not take its law and order seriously will soon find itself in a precarious position. A number of Western mining towns that established a safe, orderly environment in the late 1800s were able to survive the closing of the mines, simply because people enjoyed living in a community with such privileges. Conversely, even a large city with a steady population can be in danger of collapsing if law and order become an insurmountable problem. An example of a city government learning the need to establish law and order is the city of East St. Louis, which experienced the travesty of near bankruptcy because of the loss of self-discipline and order.
- 5. The government should have a goal. "Where there is no vision, the people perish." (Proverbs 29:18). This is especially true when governing a group of people. If there are no set goals or challenges, where do the people aim? Is the group to grow, or merely to exist as they are? The dynamics of New York City's harbors made it a business area with a goal for international trade. It grew at an incredible rate. Jerusalem was and is a city of worship and still flourishes today. Many researchers believe that one of the main factors of Rome's decline was simply that there were no more goals.

BEGINNING OF DEMOCRACY

The birth of democracy was in the Greek culture. If you had visited Greece a little over 400 years before Jesus walked through the streets of Jerusalem, you would have been able to witness the very first democracy known to man. You would find the governments different than most governments today; the Greek territories were divided into city-states, which meant that the cities and their outlying areas were independent from one another. Within these city-states the seeds of democracy were being planted. Within 100 years of your first visit to these regions, Aristotle and Plato would have been expounding the wisdom of government mainly by established laws. Greek democracy developed in Athens, and at first was called a direct democracy. Each male had a responsibility to serve on a permanent seat on the local assembly, deciding laws and government policies. The assembly set the rules and maintained authority. The democracy of Greek city-states was limited, women and slaves were not allowed to vote; yet, at that time it was a model of popular involvement.

Rivalries developed between the city-states, which can be considered a good thing. The fighting first occurred over land disputes between the two powers. Because of conflicts, the people of each city-state became politically involved and fiercely loyal to their government. The best known citystates were Athens and Sparta who had strong governments and powerful military forces. Sparta had a standing army, and Athens possessed a powerful navy. The city-states had a close-knit atmosphere similar to a family, and the governments were founded in their rough form around 700 B.C. At first, the city-states were ruled by an oligarchy, which was a small group of aristocratic-type men. Gradually, however, many male citizens were given the right to vote, serve on a jury, and hold public office.

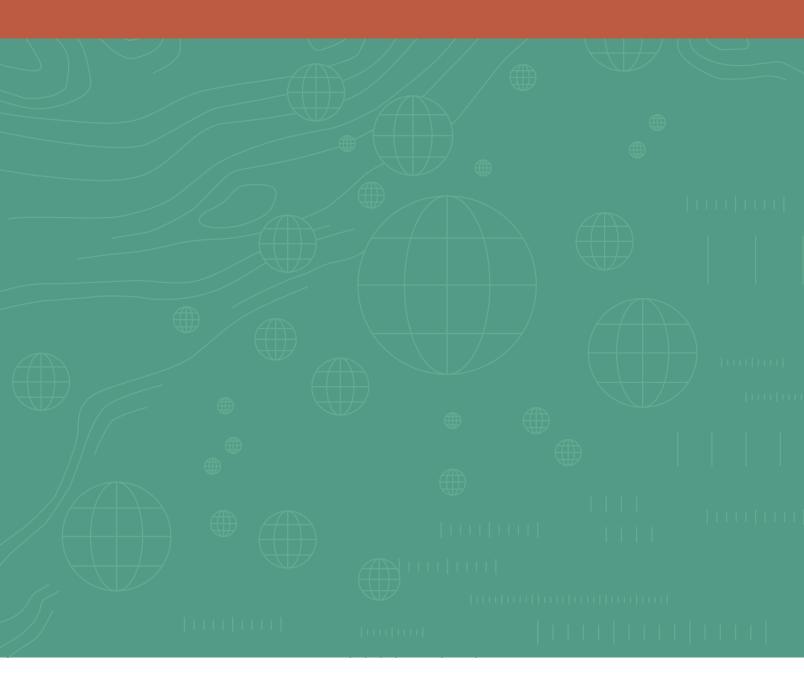

A walk through Athens in 400 B.C. gives us a glimpse of the government of that area. We see a group of 500 men in session deliberating over a new law for the Athenians. These men were selected from a lottery, as were those serving on a jury. Though some of the poorer men could not leave work in order to serve in either office, the freedoms afforded to the citizens were highly valued and became a model for future governments.

Were the city-states always democracies? No, if we look back four more centuries we see that kings had ruled the city-states for centuries. They were concerned mostly with personal power and did little for the poor people who were barely surviving on what little they could farm from the land. Nobles overthrew most of the monarchs by 750 B.C. and opened the way for a new type of rule. These rich men owned much land and had vast power in the localized government. Unrest because of slavery and power-hungry nobles led to city-states being overthrown by leaders who wanted a change. These leaders were known as tyrants, because they had grabbed absolute control by force. Many of the tyrants achieved their original goals of getting farmland and jobs for the needy, but soon they too had power-hungry disputes. Oligarchies eventually replaced the tyrants, but then Athens made a political shift which helped change the history of government.

In 594 B.C. Solon was chosen as an Athenian statesman with reformation powers. Athens chose Solon to make laws to better assist the populace. Solon established a law which prohibited enslaving people in debt. He set up a strict code of law, and defined the duties of classes of people within the city-state. After he left office, his successor, Cleisthenes, presented a constitution in 508 B.C. This proposal opened up the voting rights to all free adult men. The assembly of 500 would include any citizen of Athens. Democracy was truly advancing toward the concept that rights and privileges should be provided for all citizens.
